Selection of recent textile works 2016 - 2025

Scattered Collections and Outcome

Scattered Collections and Outcome are the titles of two series of textile relief sculptures I have been working on since 2016. Some draped over a fixed geometric surface, others loosely hanging pleats on a metal rod.

The works are inviting and enticing in the recognizable elements that the textiles contain, for example a puff sleeve, a skirt or a collar. They tremble in a point of tension between recognizability and something enigmatic. In that, they are like surrealist objects. They are present and at the same time on their way to becoming something else.

I approach the process from a visual artistic starting point, always starting with the square as if it were a canvas, and from there let the textile speak within the logic of the form.

It is important that the form implicitly contains the possibility of movement and change in a credible expression and origin. That the form is credible in a range of possibilities, directions, hints, expressions, contrasts and forces that tremble, please and disturb in the intersection between being something and something else simultaneously. Something enigmatic that cannot be captured, but instead invites approximations of definition.
